Week in Review

This week started very smooth, I completed many of my assignments by following the burn up list. Unfortunately, by Thursday things crumbled because I went to a convention, I submitted my failure to success assignment late. Using SWOT I learned things about myself that I was not aware of, I have begun to focus on working from the least to greater on that list. I updated my mission statement to focus more in school to graduate at the right time. My research was focus on the industry of Entrepreneurship. One last thing while working on this document I overwrote the original file. Using GitHub I was able to recover the correct version to resave it.

Reflect and Connect

It's the second week, now more familiar with the flow of things. I have begun to contribute more comments towards my peers. I have made great progress in the class, but like last week one late assignment. I improved paying more attention to the comments posted on the FSO platform. I continue to update GitHub, but no feedback from my instructor yet. What I have learned will surely help me with all future projects in my current job or future adventures.
