Week in Review

This week has been harder than expected but making headway. I learned about new ways of managing projects. The most challenging assignment was setting up GitHub with folders, and file uploads. I clearly see why it's important to attack your project piece by piece. The time estimation assignment will help me keep my time once I get it down pack. This week clearly shows me how hard I will have to work as a developer.

Reflect and Connect

Being that it's my first week, I am really confused. I don't believe that I added too much value if any, I believe that it would be my participation in the class. I perform very well but missed one assignment response twice. I have improved my GitHub skill tremendously this week, learning how to create folders and uploading work via GitHub desktop. Next I will have to work extra hard to stay on top of new projects starting with the burn-up-list. What I have learned so far can really relate to parts of my job but I see it more for my future development.
